CLARK'S SCHOOL

As we haven't seen anything from this place for quite a while I'll send a few items this week.

The people are catching up with the crops throughout this section of the country.

Health has been very bad for the past six or eight weeks. Whooping cough has been raging.

On last Sunday morning at 2:30 o'clock, the death angel passed through the pearly white gate of the throne of God and took its flight to the old world and claimed from the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Reynolds their little angel Beatrice. The entire community extends sympathy to this bereaved family.

Our Sunday school is improving all the time. Have 74 on roll now. We got our new organ last week and are highly pleased with it.

The people of this community met at the school house the 20th and graded the school ground. As there was a high bank in front of the school building, Mr. L. M. Cherry was at the head of it. He is a hustler and keeps this community busy all the time trying to build up the community. Would be glad for the county superintendent, Mr. Bourne, and others who are interested to be present at the opening of the school.

There was a large crowd out at the singing Sunday night.

As news is scarce, I'll be going Success to the Graphic and its readers.

"Weary World."

GROWING HOGS.

For a hog to be profitable he must be kept growing from birth to market age. He cannot be profitable unless he is healthy. He can always be in a profit-producing condition if he is fed B. A. Thomas' Hog Powder. We positively tell you that this remedy prevents cholera, removes worms and cures thumps. If the powder does not make good, we will. Short & Collins.

NOTICE.

I have been appointed joint manager with R. S. Elliott to manage the Brownsville Laundry, and will have complete charge of all the outside work. I wish to thank my friends for their patronage while I had the agency. We have reorganized the working force, and can assure you that the work will be done in an entirely satisfactory manner, and returned to you promptly. EUGENE WILLS.

Mr. Isaac Cantrell, R. No. 2, Terre Haute, Ind., writes—"My experience with B. A. Thomas Hog Powder, is that it has given good results in helping those that were sick and keeping those well that were not sick. It does all that you claim for it. I would not have had a sick hog if I had used it sooner. Short & Collins."

Hon. Finis J. Garrett

Finis James Garrett, representative of the ninth Tennessee district, is serving his sixth term in congress, having entered with the term beginning March 4th, 1905, when he was one of the youngest members of the house. As it is, he is the youngest of the veteran members. He became a member when only twenty-nine years old and is now but forty. Of the 435 members of the house sixty-nine, or less than 15 per cent, have served longer than he.

Coming to congress blessed with good health, staunch character and unusual intellectual endowment, with a naturally apt grasp of public questions an excellent opportunity for his gift and attainments opened before him. That he has done exceedingly well and most honorably with his native equipment and advantages for public service will be readily affirmed by all with whom he has been associated as a representative in congress, and by officers of the executive branch of the government, from President Wilson all down the line.

For "Finis Garrett," as the still young Tennessean is familiarly known is one of the ablest and most dependable members of congress, implicitly relied upon by his democratic party associates, and especially honored by call to council by his party's chieftain in the white house, he is esteemed and respected by his political adversaries to a degree that marks the mark of exceptional fitness for public duty.

While one of the most forcible, eloquent and cogent speakers of the house much of Mr. Garrett's most notable work has been of a constructive order in committee work and in advisory capacity among leaders of the house.

His first committee assignment was to the committee on claims in the fifty-ninth congress. Shortly thereafter he became a member of the committee on insular affairs, and has served continuously on that important committee. The chairman of the committee is Representative William A. Jones of Virginia, who has served longer in congress than any other democrat. Mr. Garrett ranks next to Mr. Jones, and by reason of the impaired health of the Virginia member the Tennessean has had devolving upon him a large share of leading in the work of the committee, and has always carried much of the burden of shaping legislation for all our outlying island possessions, such as constructing an autonomous government for Porto Rico and providing for the future self government of the Philippines—measures which have passed the house and are now pending in the senate.

Mr. Garrett so early in his congressional career proved a clean strong grasp of parliamentary questions that it was logical advancement for him to be placed on the rules committee, where he went by the election of his fellow members when, in the sixty-second congress, the democrats adopted the innovation of relieving the speaker of the appointment of the standing committees of the house and placing their choice in the hands of the whole body. He has been without a peer as the democratic debater on every contest over the rules, issues that always set the stage for the most interesting and important parliamentary struggles of congress; for they are necessarily preliminary to clearing the way of action and despatch of important measures, and especially for the execution of party programs. Mr. Garrett has been especially active and useful during the present session of congress.

In the long business absence of the chairman, Robert L. Henry of Texas, and illness of the next ranking member, Edward W. Pou of North Carolina. With this extra duty thrust upon him, exacting the highest parliamentary skill and tactful leadership he has so well risen to the occasion that President Wilson has repeatedly availed himself of the Tennessean member's ready powers. He particularly distinguished himself leading the democrats in the debate against the McLe-more resolution warning American citizens against traveling on ships of belligerents subject to attack by German sub-marines.

Mr. Garrett has been frequently called to the chair by the speaker and has presided over the committee of the whole on the state of the union when many of the great measures of legislation were under consideration.

It happens that this is not only "election years," but general election year, in which president and vice-president of the United States and senators and representatives in congress have to be elected. It happens moreover that while this sixty-fourth congress is one of the greatest and gravest in the history of the country, it is necessarily of vital concern to the future of the democratic party which is charged with the chief responsibility for the government in its legislative and executive branches. The democratic majority in the house being only ten in a membership of 435, the party leaders have been obliged to be vigilant and insistent in the keeping of the ranks on the legislative firing line in tact and mobilized for constant action. So far the attendance has been unusually good, notwithstanding the average member hears with wistful mien his district calling him.

In this connection it is worth while to note that Speaker Champ Clark, always on the watch tower for perils menacing the party he has loved and served with all his heart, addressed a letter a few days ago to a fellow democrat who had a rival at home in which he urged the importance of members remaining here at their posts.

"July," he said "will be crowded with important business, as well as the rest of the months. Very shortly the house appropriations bill will be coming back from the senate loaded down with amendments of all sorts and sizes, and we will have as much of a fight on some of the senate amendments as we had on the original bills. Conference reports will be pouring in, and they are all very important.

"Added this and the ordinary run of business we have the Mexican situation on hand, and no man can tell what will come out of that at any time."

Reciting items of indispensable legislation yet pending, Speaker Clark concluded:

"I am giving you the very same advice that I would give every democratic member who would ask me."

Along with other leaders of the house who have been concerned with river and harbor legislation, Mr. Garrett has been active in promoting more effective legislation for the Mississippi river, particularly with reference to flood control, the most vexing of all the problems with which the people and the government have had to contend. It was realized that something distinctive had to be done in the direction of flood control apart from the handling of the navigation of the great river. Hence the creation of the committee on flood control, which consists of fifteen members. The chairman is Mr. B. G. Humphreys of Mississippi, who has been a member of the rivers and harbors committee, but had served on the committee on levees and improvements of the Mississippi river which was abolished in the sixty-second congress. Mr. Garrett ranks next to Mr. Humphreys on this important new committee.

Possibly the most interesting and highly capable work of Mr. Garrett's services in congress, especially, as viewed by those who have been most intimately associated with him in those lines of duty, has been as a member of several extremely important special investigation committees. The first of these was to investigate the activities of persons interested in the country's foreign shipping trade. Numerous witnesses were examined and much information elicited, illuminating the defects and needs of the American merchant marine and the humiliating superiority of foreign carriage and freightage of American passengers, merchants and merchandise. Mr. Garrett was signally useful in bringing out salient facts, upon which a measure restoring the American merchant marine is very soon to be enacted.

Another investigation in which Mr. Garrett was a leading performer was that of the sixty second congress, which made an exhaustive inquiry into the sugar industry in all its phases in this country and everywhere else in the world. The report of the investigation is regarded by experts in the trade and in sugar planting as the most complete compendium ever formulated of any of the world's great activities alleged against certain corporations, special interests and combinations. That was commonly known as the Mulhall Lobby investigation." Mr. Garrett was chairman of the committee. Hundreds of witnesses were examined who represented nearly every trade, many national commercial and industrial and labor organizations, consuming most of the summer of 1913. As chairman of a committee empowered to conduct an impartial inquiry into very serious charges against congressmen and private citizens of varied occupations, Mr. Garrett won general commendation and the special admiration of his fellow members of the house by his flawless fairness and consummate skill as chairman of the committee, sitting almost like a court. He disclosed a serenity of judicial poise and a patient firmness that surprised the most provoking witness into orderly procedure and expedited the progress of the long investigation without dallying at any time.

The chairman's work wrought a satisfactory conclusion from which there was scarcely a murmur of dissent by the parties in controversy, most of the stories against the accused were shown up as false or exaggerated. The committee's report, while charitable and considerate, was not without timely grave rebuke of pernicious persons involved. A member of congress who, although not criminally concerned, had betrayed a lax regard for the dignity and decency of his high office as a representative, was plainly reminded of the committee's condemnation of the manner of his relations with persons interested in measures before congress. It is interesting to note that with all his past faults, being naturally a popular man among his constituents he has reformed and was reelected after having been constrained to quit the house.

A sterling quality of the character of "Finis Garrett" has been unwavering fidelity to duty, to conviction to friend, to party; and, and if he has shown human partiality and partisanship in his personal relations, it has always been characterized by fair and just consideration of his fellow men, which coupled with his unfailing good nature and genial temperament, captivated the affections who best knew and closest observed him.

This writer and observer of the ninth district member from Tennessee has stated that he has seen hundreds of men come and go in Washington public life during the most of a period of twenty-five years, and has never marked one more deserving of the trust and confidence of the people and his party than Finis J. Garrett.—Union City News-Banner. adv
